for which they were prepared. Rationale: In the past, the EPP used to have a strong induction program and developed multiple activities with the participation of novice completers. It was aimed primarily to support them during their first five years as teachers. The need to prioritize on other areas of the EPP, weakened the induction program. It is not until 2015 that the program has been installed again. The fact that the accreditation agency for the first time requires a	2. detailed follow up on completers, encourage us to think about possible strategies to have a continuous and systematic contact with the completers. Although there are theoretical differences about the relationship between completers performance and student's results in standardized tests, there is no doubt that, to have valid and reliable data about completers endeavors, helps the EPP to strengthen programs as well as the support provided. In addition, it contributes to have a closer relationship with	3.
